

November 17

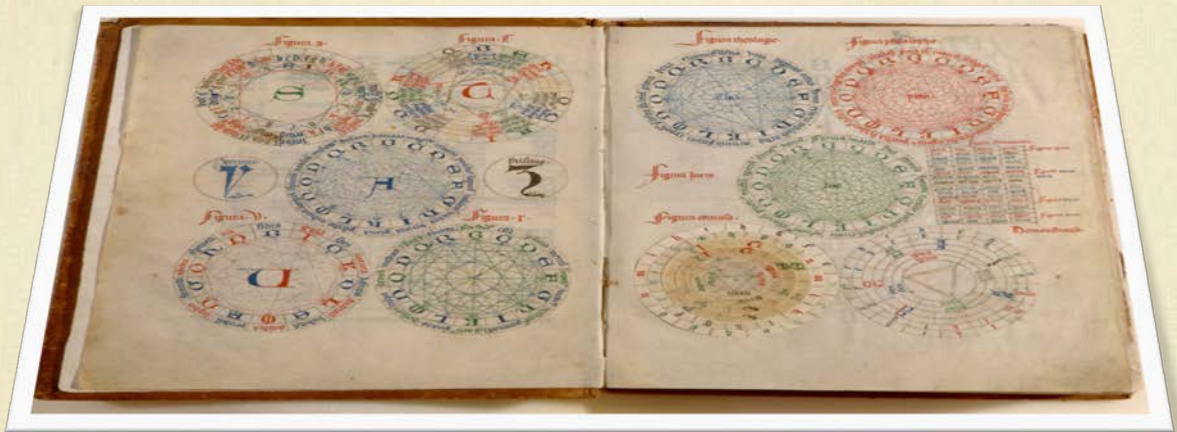

3pm

Buchanan

Tower 799

The Early Romance Studies Research Cluster presents:

“Early Medieval Thinking Machines”

When we think of books, we tend to see them as repositories of texts that can be read, line by line and page by page. However, an important category of books from the early medieval Latin West do not have these basic properties.

What was their purpose and why do we see their boom in the ninth century?

Is it sufficient to see them as primitive dictionaries or are they something more sophisticated?

A talk by Evina Steinova, Ph.D.

Affiliated Researcher

Huygens ING, Institute of the Dutch Royal Academy of Arts and Sciences, The Hague